First Hello

Introducing Yourself and Others

A lively 15-minute English lesson set at a university campus club fair in Bangladesh.

SPEAK TO CONNECT

LISTEN TO INCLUDE

HI, I'M NILA!

A new face.
A small brave hello.

Today, we make room for a hello.

By the end, learners can...

01 Start

Open a short conversation and say who you are.

02 Connect

Share one detail that gives the other person something to respond to.

03 Include

Introduce a friend by name and invite both people to speak.

04 Choose

Use a friendly question and respect people’s choices.

A campus club fair. A real reason to speak.

Context is more than local names

Campus societies, a crowded fair, a shared map, peer introductions, and language choice shape this scene.

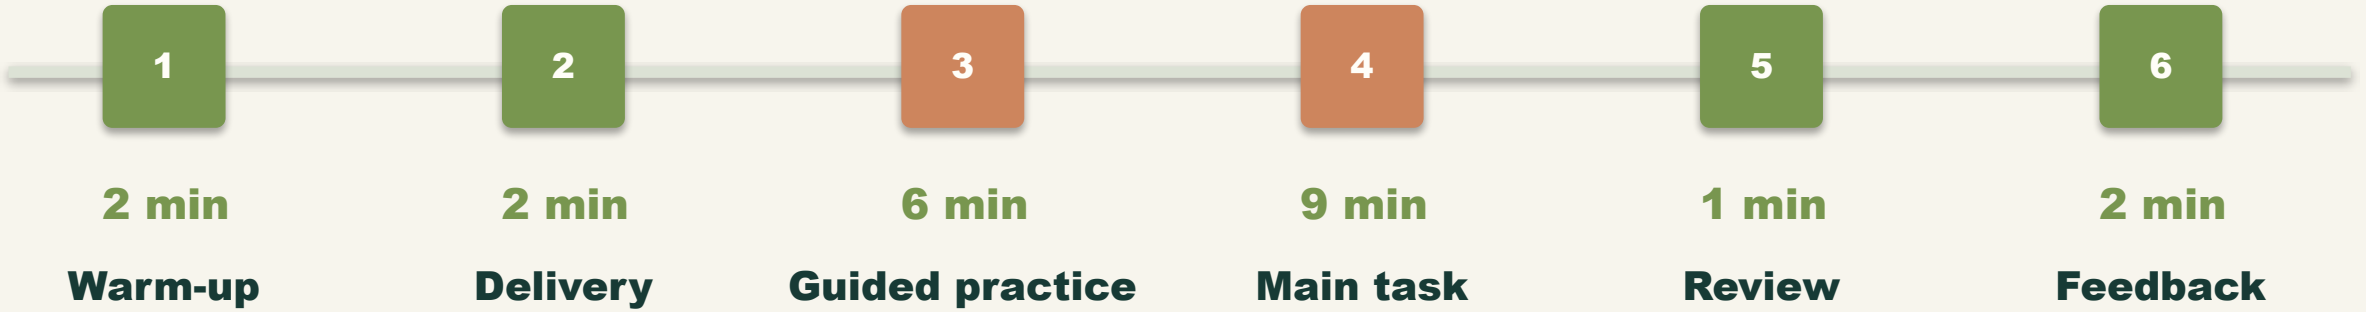

A familiar social moment

A new student wants to join in but doesn’t know anyone yet.

The learner’s mission

Help Nila feel welcome—without pressure, assumptions, or perfect-English expectations.

Six stages, built around 15 minutes of role-play.

Stages 3–4 are the 15-minute role-play: 4 rounds · 12 criteria points · one report

Four moves make an introduction feel easy.

01 / OPEN

“Hi, I’m Tania.”

Say your name.

02 / CONNECT

“I’m studying business.”

Offer one small detail.

03 / INTRODUCE

“Nila, this is my friend Rafi.”

Name the relationship.

04 / INVITE

“What are you interested in?”

Give them a way in.

In Bangladesh, a learner may greet someone in Bangla and switch to English for practice. Let language include people; don’t use it to test their background.

Learners do the talking—not just the reading.

Rounds 1–2 · greet and connect

Learners greet Nila, say their name, share a detail and ask a question back.

Round 3 · bring a friend in Rafi arrives with tea. Learners introduce both people and give them something to say.

Scored as they go

Each round states three criteria, then scores the learner’s line and names the fix.

Round 4 · invite and close

Invite Nila to the first meeting, close warmly, and produce a 12-point role-play report.

15 minutes · 4 rounds · 12 criteria points · one visible report

How do we know they learned?

The exit ticket gathers evidence, not just participation.

1 Choose

Select the most welcoming opener.

2 Introduce

Choose a respectful way to introduce a friend.

3 Write

Create a greeting and open follow-up question.

Role-play report (12 points) + exit-ticket score and next step

Responsible AI: be honest about what this does.

The page looks for greetings, self-introduction phrases, names, and an invitation or question.

Learner answers stay in the browser and are not uploaded or saved.

No external AI service is connected. Feedback is a transparent classroom aid, not a teacher replacement.

Browser text-to-speech depends on available installed voices. Text interaction still works without audio.

If a course rubric requires an actual AI model, add an approved service only with teacher permission, privacy safeguards, and clear disclosure.

A short sample: put the four moves together.

TANIA

Hi, I’m Tania. I’m studying business.

NILA

Nice to meet you, Tania! What brought you to the fair?

TANIA

My friend Rafi invited me. Oh—Nila, this is Rafi.

RAFI

Hi, Nila. What are you interested in?

Notice: names · relationship · a shared detail · an open question

A real, runnable classroom project.

index.html	Lesson structure & activities
lesson.ts	Typed interaction, practice & feedback logic
lesson.js	Compiled browser script
lesson.css	Responsive, large-print visuals
server.js	Simple local Node server
lesson-test.js	Smoke tests for lesson interactions

Run: node server.js → open http://127.0.0.1:4173

A first hello can open a much bigger world.

Speak to connect. Listen to include.